Flow Per Barrels

Great Excitement as Result of New Producer in Turner Valley

Exclusive to Bulletin
CALGARY, July 4.—Oil circles here are seething with excitement following the announcement that Dalhousie No. 5 well located in the south end of Turner Valley and about a mile and a half north of the Home Well, came in with a flow of crude oil over the week-end at a depth of 4325 feet.

Rising rapidly in the 15-inch casing, the gusher gave indication of a rich strike. Later the oil gushed up with terrific force into the derrick, splashing oil for many yards around the well.

Production 300 Barrels Daily
The production of this new well, for many months and has had more than the whole of the district on account of the extremely rich nature of the reservoir. It is still considered open both at the well and in the bottom of the well, and it is possible that it will be made to under-run the Home Well, which is being permitted to flow to produce surface tanks to which the crude oil is being pumped.

The new producer is estimated to be around the 1000 barrel per day mark, and it is expected that it will be increasing in the near future. The well is being worked in the field, the shift strike of some weeks ago, and it is expected that it will be having speed up a great deal.

Stream of Tourist Traffic Will Flow Through Alberta's Capital When Motor Way Is Opened to National Playground

Largest National Park Holds World-Wide Tourist Interest

"The Eastern Gateway to The Largest National Park in The World," is the appellation that may fittingly be claimed by the city of Edmonton. What Calgary is to Rocky Mountains National Park—the clearing house for tourist traffic from the east—so is Edmonton for Jasper National Park. The capital of Alberta is connected with the park by the main line of the Canadian National Railways with its speedy and luxurious trains, the distance to the town of Jasper being 234 miles. The rapidly increasing stream of tourists to Edmonton and the park will be greatly augmented when the motor highway now under construction is completed.

Jasper park is the largest national park reserve in the world with a total area of 5,380 square miles; an amazing extent of playgrounds only possible in a country of such dimensions as the Dominion of Canada—an area which has been fittingly described as "a vast mountain wilderness, largely unexplored." Following the policy of conservation of scenic areas for the use, benefit and enjoyment of the people, the Dominion Government has established a rigid control of administration, one of the salient features of which is the prohibition of hunting by any method whatever and the refusal to allow unsealed guns within park confines. With this has been coupled the policy of, as far as possible, keeping the region in its primal state. Yet for the convenience of those who visit any of these primal areas under national park control, a progressive programme of road building, trail building, and establishment of such other necessary conveniences for the comfort of tourists has been followed out in making these wonders readily accessible, not only to the citizens of Canada, but to the residents of the world at large.

Mount Robson, the highest mountain peak in Jasper National Park

The railway reveals a panorama as it follows along the beautiful valley of the Athabasca, which is not soon forgotten—for this valley shows an unusual trait, and that is the wide open grassy valley showing an expanse of meadow lands and an extended glimpse of the meandering river. This stream played an important part in the history of the early pioneers of the Hudson's Bay and Northwest fur trading companies. Other spectacular and beautiful sections of Jasper National Park are easily accessible over safe motor roads or excellent trails constructed by the Dominion Government.

In the vicinity of the townsite of Jasper are many small vividly colored lakes, valleys and waterfalls, while in the district to the north are few streams that have not at least one interesting waterfall or gorge, while the unusually wide valley of the Athabasca with its many channels and open meadows gives one a sense of freedom often lacking in mountain resorts. Further back from the more travelled trails are many fine alpine regions where lofty snow-peaks and huge ice-fields offer inducements to those travellers who find recreation in scaling difficult heights.

Trails and roads leading from the townsite of Jasper give easy access to the best fishing waters; here trout are available in the cold waters of the many streams and lakes with which the park is so liberally supplied. One trail leads to Maligne lake, considered to be one of the most beautiful jewels of the mountains; Maligne canyon where the river forces its way through a gigantic passage of rock and where the scientist and ordinary tourist both easily may find wonderful examples of erosions and water-holes, the latter being remarkable for their size and number.

In this park some of the most famous and lofty peaks rear their proud heads, among them Mount Columbia (12,294), Mount Hardisty (11,200), and Mounts Brazeau, North Twin and Resplendent, even above these soars majestic Mount Robson, and although this mountain is not within the exact limits of the park, it is for tourist and exploration purposes a part of it. Four and one half miles from the townsite rises the vari-colored Mount Pyramid, brilliantly conspicuous in a great distance in clear weather. Among the hundreds of other points of interest may be mentioned the famous Yellowhead pass, the western gateway to the park; the Committee's Punch Bowl, Miette Hot Springs and Mount Edith Cavell, a monument bearing witness for evermore to the bravery and devotion of the British nurse of that name.

The Committee's Punch Bowl, about thirty-five miles by trail from the townsite, has unique historical associations and remarkable topographic features which have rendered it a great attraction for tourists. The trail leads southward through the beautiful Athabasca valley—it is well travelled and the journey may be made in comfort on one of the mountain ponies available in the village, or the more adventurous and hardy may make the journey on foot. Following the west bank of the Athabasca river to the fork where the Whirlpool river joins, the trail leads off in a southwesterly direction to the head of the Athabasca pass. At this summit is a small basin of water about twenty yards in diameter worn out by the continuous fall of water to a depth of 15 feet. This has been known since the advent of the Hudson's Bay Traders nearly a hundred years ago as "The Committee's Punch Bowl."

In the long journey by pack train and canoe and raft from Vancouver through the Athabasca valley to their trading posts in Western Canada, the early factors and traders were in the habit of resting at the Punch Bowl. Here it became the custom to pass the cup that cheers, in an effort to make lighter the arduous tasks which lay before them when the journey should be continued. It is to Alexander Ross, who accompanied the governor of the Hudson's Bay company through the pass on an eastward journey in 1825 that we are first indebted for the knowledge of this pleasant custom, for it is in his "Fur Hunters of The Far West," published in London in 1855 that he tells of this trip and makes mention of the Punch Bowl in one short paragraph:

"This elevated pond is further dignified with the name of 'The Committee's Punch Bowl' in honour of which his Excellency (Governor Simpson) treated us to a bottle of wine, as we had neither time nor convenience to make a bowl of punch, although a glass of it would have been very acceptable. It is a tribute always paid to this place when a nabob of the fur trade passes by."

The Punch Bowl is situated directly at the head of the pass and is remarkable for the fact that two streams lead out from it in exactly opposite directions. The northern joins the Whirlpool river and later through a series of rivers empties into the Arctic ocean, while the other eventually discharges into the Pacific by way of the Columbia. This is the only pond directly on the watershed so far discovered in Canada.

Miette Hot Springs are of great interest for their unique setting and the curious natural phenomenon which they exhibit in the constant high temperature maintained throughout both winter and summer. These springs are twelve miles south of the railway station at Pochontas and are reached from there by trail. There are two large springs and several smaller issuing from the rocks at an elevation of 4,000 feet.

Bungalows at Jasper Park Lodge, Jasper National Park

The temperature is practically constant ranging between 116 and 125 degrees Fahrenheit. An analysis of the water shows that it is to a certain extent radioactive, and this is believed to have a bearing on the therapeutic value of the waters.

One of the most remarkable natural phenomena in the park is Maligne canyon, a deep and awesome gorge some six miles from Jasper Park Lodge, the Canadian National Railways Hotel on Lac Beauvert, and nine miles from the townsite. The canyon may be reached from the latter place in about three-quarters of an hour by motor over a splendid road kept up by the Dominion Government. Those who prefer wilder scenery and a slower method of travel may follow a trail north along the Athabasca, which leaves the motor road after crossing the river from Jasper, and rejoins it just west of Trefoil lakes.

For many centuries the waters of the Maligne river have worn their way through solid rock to a remarkable extent so that today the gorge is about a mile long, and in parts two hundred or more feet deep. In sections, it is only about three feet wide, but varies to a great extent throughout the course of its mile. The mouth of the gorge is a mile from the mouth of the Maligne river just above the Athabasca flats, and as the canyon follows its irregular path the walls seem to have a tendency to close up. A very strange thing is that but little water enters the gorge from above, while the river is a rushing, raging torrent by the time it reaches the mouth. This has been accounted for by the supposition that the waters of the Maligne are derived from underground passages. It is believed that there is a subterranean river, nine miles long draining Medicine lake and entering Maligne river.

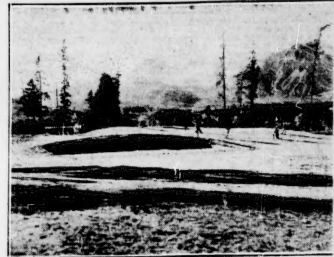

Lower Falls, Snake Indian River, Jasper National Park

The name "Maligne" was given the river and gorge by early fur traders who were forced to make their way across the mountains via the pass; at the junction of the Athabasca and Maligne rivers it was necessary to make a very dangerous ford, and so the trappers called it "Maligne."

In the interests of conservation of wild life the Government has made a provision absolutely prohibiting hunting in the National Parks. There is no better place in Canada to look for wild life than in any of the national parks, and Jasper offers its quota of the denizens of the forest to those interested in observing them. Under the policy of protection existing, the wild life has to a more or less extent lost its fear of man, and animals no longer scurry for cover at the slightest suspicion of the once-dreaded man scent. So that to the sportsman armed with a camera there is excellent sport in stalking wild animals for pictures.

Jasper offers many inducements to the holiday seeker—a good golf links; motor roads within the park; trail riding; mountain climbing; fishing and other outdoor activities. The climate is ideal for all kinds of outdoor sports. Clear warm days followed by cool nights, with little rainfall, make it possible to lie under canvas all summer with enjoyment. The absence of flies and reptile pests also adds to the comfort, and no poisonous snakes are found, nor are mosquitoes ever present in any numbers. The especially long twilights of this latitude lengthen the hours that can be spent out of doors, and it is sometimes ten o'clock before the glow fades from the peaks.

Jasper National Park is rich in historic tradition and that in itself tends to make more pleasant a holiday here—for who does not take delight in retracing the steps of the pioneers of the great west? The discovery of the Athabasca pass in 1811 by David

The Golf Course, Jasper National Park

Thompson, trader, explorer and geographer, opened a way to the upper waters of the Columbia and made direct communication with the Pacific possible. For more than a hundred years the "Athabasca trail" was a frequented route of travel from the plains to the Pacific. Thompson himself was an employee of the Northwest Company, the adventurous and active rivals of the Hudson's Bay Company, and for fifteen years he travelled to and fro in Western Canada establishing a chain of posts for the capture of the rich fur trade. With the discovery of the Athabasca pass, the valley of that name became the scene of an active rivalry between the two great companies. About the year 1800 a Hudson's Bay post was established on the western shore of Bruile lake and here in 1817 came Jasper Hawes as representative of the company. About all that is known of this individual is that he was a clerk in "whose administrative abilities the company placed great confidence." History records but little of him, yet from his name has been derived the name of the largest national park in the world. For nearly a hundred years the Athabasca valley from the eastern gate of the Rockies as far as what is now known as the town of Jasper, was known as "Jasper valley." Early writers refer to the two guardian peaks which flank the eastern entrance as the "Jasper Portals," while the shallow lake formed by the widening of the river was called then, as it is today, "Jasper Lake." And now the park is called Jasper National park.

Soon after the arrival of Jasper Hawes the Northwest Company established a post on the Athabasca a few miles south of its confluence with the Snaring river, under the command of William Henry. This gave the Northwest Company a tactical advantage since "Henry House" was more convenient than "Jasper House" to the alleys through the mountain, and the rich fur districts about the headwaters of the Columbia and Fraser rivers. Hawes retaliated by moving his post to the north end of Jasper lake and under his management it became one of the most important posts of the company.

The Northwest Company had another of their posts at "Oldfort" opposite the present townsite of Jasper, where the weary travellers from the Athabasca or Yellowhead pass usually found canoes or fresh horses awaiting them.

Twice a season along the Athabasca the "mountain express" crossed the mountains to meet the brigade of boats which had ascended the Columbia from Fort Vancouver, and at Boat Encampment, on the Big Bend of the Columbia, exchange of mail, accounts, and furs took place. The brigades then returned to their respective posts. In 1826 the Yellowhead pass was discovered and a new route opened by way of the Miette, Fraser and Thompson rivers. Later the shining steel of the railway made its way through the beautiful valley of the Athabasca and on through to the coast, with the result that a journey from Edmonton to Jasper, which formerly required weeks of exacting hardship, may now be made in luxurious comfort within the space of a few hours.

Jasper is becoming increasingly popular as the years roll by. As a result Edmonton will continue to benefit more and more from the city's proximity to this greatest of Canada's playgrounds.
